Felicity's Story

Felicity is a barn favorite at the ranch; with her sweet, funny, and bombproof personality, we all love her. We got asked to take her along with one of our other rescues from the kill pen, and we are oh so glad we did. April 13th, we met up at a Walmart with a few kill pen workers; we immediately took her off their trailer and put her in ours. Physically she was great; her feet were long and her mane in dreads but other than that, she was perfect. Mentally she was very aware, hypervigilant, but took everything like a champ! Felicity had to; Destiny relied heavily on Felicity and looked to her for support. Felicity didn't mind the trailer, halter, or all the people around her. We were on the road, and once we got to the ranch, we quickly unloaded both horses and put them in separate stalls. We started working coconut oil into her mane and tail to try to get the dreads out. The next day we have both horses a much-needed bath. The following weeks were interesting, to say the least. Since Felicity was so relaxed and comfortable with everything, we decided to hop on her bareback. One of our peer mentors got on her and started walking her around. Felicity was incredible and didn't even care. She was soon brought into work after that and jumped for the first time a few months after. Even though she is low in the herd order, she watches over everything, which then led to her show name of Overwatch. Felicity is one of the best horses we have and is almost inseparable from Destiny. We have no idea why anyone would put such a perfect horse in the kill pen to this day.
